The Mormons spent seven years in the Missouri Valley -- 1846-1853 -- staging people west, but also building a network of roads, bridges, ferries, farms, towns, schools, churches, businesses, work shops, mills, cultural halls and civic buildings the likes of which the American West had never seen.

Major Mormon towns and camps in Nebraska included Cold Spring Camp, just north of L Street at about 60th Street in present Omaha; Cutler's Park situated along the west edge of Forest Lawn cemetery, probably just north of Young Street and on either side of present day Mormon Bridge Road.
