2/ loess deposits over central & eastern Nebraska and the scattered prehistoric dwelling sites. The Oto Indians moved west across the Missouri River from Iowa about 1700 A.D. No other Indians then lived in east central Nebraska. Modern archeolo gical & anthropological studies indicate that no Indians had lived in this district for perhaps as much as 500 years. And it was not until about 1728 that the Oto were joined in Nebraska by their cousins, the Missouri Indians. Speaking very similar languages, the two small tribes lived
