which they called the Ne Brath Ka.

Following hard on the heels of the migrating Oto were French and Canadian explorer-traders. They traded for furs and took Oto chiefs downstream to meet the French Governor-General in 1714 and to Paris to meet the King of France in 1724. Eventually, their European competitors in new world trade and native American politics, the Spanish took control of the Missouri and Platte River fur trade routes in 1763. The Spanish crown offered substantial
