the Lord for the many blessings wherewith he had blessed me and also for the many blessings he had bestowed upon my dear Companion, and all our friends, and implored his future care and protection, for our Safety & welfare, told him my desire to do good, to walk uprightly, to live long upon the Earth, and be usefull in my day and jeneration. I prayed for strength and patience to endure to the end..."

Appleton Milo Harmon, who shared in the invention of a roadmeter, by which the Saints were able to measure every quarter of a mile traveled in their wagons, summarized in his journal, saying: "The past winter (1846-47) in fact the past 12 months, has been a trying seeve for the Saints as they had ever had to pass through. Sickness, death, loss of cattle teams. Poverty in almost every shape. Exiles in a Christian land. Heavy draft for men
