where Omaha Central High School now stands overlooking the downtown area of present-day Omaha. The Oto were promised rights to the buildings in Winter Quarters when the Saints moved on to the Rockies. Interestingly, the Omaha Indians urged the Saints to build Winter Quarters about 10 miles further north, in the vicinity of old Fort Atkinson. Thus, they tacitly admitted the Oto Indians owned the land the Mormons were occupying. Summer Quarters was built and farm land developed north and west of old Fort Atkinson by the Mormons on traditionally Mormon Omaha lands to provide them some inheritance of buildings when the Saints moved on to the Great Basin. Some of the activities and some of the comments of the Saints in the Missouri Valley distinctly convey the impression of a settling in, a relaxation and an at-ease atmosphere which Major Miller might well have considered.
