HORACE GREELEY, EDITOR OF NY TRIBUNE, INTERVIEWED BY YOUNG I n 1860, and wrote: "Brigham Young spoke readily, with no appearance of hesitation or reserve, and with no apparent desire to conceal anything, nor did he repel any of my questions as impertinent. He was very plainly dressed in thin summer clothing, and with no air of sanctimony or fanaticism. In appearance he is portly, frank, good-natured, a rather thick-set man of 58 seeming to enjoy life, and to be in no particular hurry to get to heaven. His associates are plain men, evidently born and reared to a life of labor, and looking as little like crafty hypocrites or swindlers as any body of men I ever met."
